

Janel H. Johnson, DO MPH, graduated in 2014 from Oklahoma State University College of Osteopathic Medicine and completed her Family Medicine residency in 2017 from Tahlequah, Oklahoma where she was also the co-chief resident. During her tenure as Co-Chief resident, it was her job and privilege to mentor incoming interns as well as current residents and medical students on rotation. She continued her education at Emory Rollins School of Public in the Prevention Science track from which she graduated in 2018. Her practicum was through the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention over American Indian and Alaska Native Maternal and Child Health Epidemiology for which she was a finalist for Outstanding Practicum. She is also to be inducted into the National Public Health Honor Society, Delta Omega, later this year. She currently works as a primary care provider and as physician champion on the HPV Vaccination Taskforce for Cherokee Nation Health Services at Wilma P. Mankiller Health Center in Stilwell, Oklahoma. Her work includes general healthcare for patients as well as helping to design and implement strategies to increase HPV vaccination. Dr. Johnson is a proud citizen of the Cherokee Nation.
