

Cassie McCoy is a second-year medical student at the Oklahoma State University College of Osteopathic Medicine at the Cherokee Nation in Tahlequah, OK. She is from Tulsa and has a Bachelor of Science in Biomedical Engineering from the University of Oklahoma with a minor in mathematics, graduating cum laude. She is currently the ambassador for the Office of American Indians in Medicine and Science; and a member of Sigma Sigma Phi Honors Society

(SSP) and serves on the executive team for the Pediatrics Club and Native American Students of Osteopathic Medicine, as well as being an anatomy teaching assistant.

Cassie is a proud member of the Peoria Tribe of Indians of Oklahoma and serves on the election committee for the tribe. Cassie is interested in pediatrics and tribal medicine. Her research interests include health equity and disparities.